Many times we suffer from a hoarse voice. If your voice is hoarse, you may have a raspy, weak, or airy quality to your voice that prevents you from making smooth vocal sounds. You may also need to speak louder if your voice has become weak! And eventually, it may hurt you! Allergies are one of the factors, which can affect your voice by irritating and inflaming the vocal cords, which can cause sore throat leading to hoarseness of voice.

What is hoarseness of voice?

Hoarseness is an abnormal change in the voice caused by a variety of conditions. The voice may have changes in pitch and volume, ranging from a deep, harsh voice to a weak, raspy voice.

Let's understand the common causes of hoarseness?

Hoarseness of voice happens more commonly due to

 Infection of the throat, such as sore throat (due to virus or bacteria)

 Allergies caused by tree pollens, grass pollens, and moulds

More often the infection travels down to our vocal cords and causes swelling (inflammation). This results in hoarseness.

What are the signs and symptoms of hoarseness?

Hoarseness typically makes the voice sound raspy and harsh, though it may also cause a change in the pitch or volume of the voice.

Some typical symptoms of hoarse voice are -

Sore throat

Dry throat

Dry cough

Weak voice or voice loss

Tickling sensation & rawness of throat

Who is prone to voice hoarseness?

Cigarette Smokers

Singers

Teachers / People who need to speak loudly

People Allergic to dust, fumes or chemicals

How do I take care of my voice?

Avoiding allergens, giving complete rest to your voice are some of the ways to protect your voice. Home remedies such as warm-salt water gargling or consuming natural ingredients such as ginger or peppermint may soothe your throat, however, you would still need a herbal remedy to restore your voice.

Therefore, the best way to overcome sore throat pain and reduce hoarseness of voice is using a proven herbal ingredients combination documented for quick relief.
